REFLECTION

We've learned that the store primarily offers a variety of pet supplies and agricultural products, sourced from both local and international suppliers. This diverse supply chain enables the business to cater to different customer needs and preferences. In contrast to what we expect, the store experienced a positive impact during the COVID-19 pandemic, with sales significantly increasing. This growth was driven by a shift in consumer behavior, particularly the rise in pet ownership, which helped sustain demand for their products even during challenging times.

However, despite this positive outcome, the business faces ongoing challenges in maintaining customer retention and stabilizing sales. They are working hard to ensure repeat business while balancing the need to keep sales consistent. Additionally, tax obligations play a significant strain on their finances. With taxes consuming a large portion of their income, they face difficulty reinvesting in inventory, marketing, and expansion. This situation highlights how tax obligations can directly influence small businesses' decision-making and growth strategies.

We've realized that small businesses like this one must carefully manage their finances to meet tax requirements while also ensuring their ability to expand and remain stable in the long run.
